Mr. Lincoln's Re-Election. PRENCH OPINION OF THE POLICY OF THE PRESIDENT. From the Revue des Deux Mondes, Dec. 15.)

lips of the President after the re-election were words of peace and conciliation. General Butler, in a speech which he made before leaving New York, also gave it to be understood that pacific roposals would soon be made to the Southern States. The misfortunes and the emotions of the war have not aroused any sentiment of vengeance or of hatred in the hearts of the inhabi tants of the North. They are ready to restore to the Southern States all their constitutional rights, to cover everybody with a generous amnesty, to consider all the decrees of confiscation a dead lett r. They merely ask of the South the renunciation of an institution henceforth considered incompatible with the Union. Never since the commencement of the war has the North felt itself

s) powerful, so united, so confident; all doubt, all hesitation has disappeared; the war has henceforth its definite meaning; all the forces of the nation have found a common object. This unonscious purpose, pervading thousands of individual minds, has at last become aware of its own existence. As the price of so much bloodshed, of so many tears, exertions, and troubles, it asks one thing only, "the Union without slavery." The popular verdict has a ready excited deep sgitation in the Confederate ranks. Mr. Jefferson Day's and his friends hoped that the democratic party would obtain the victory;
